Are you interested in interviewing Canada's top environmentalists, change-makers and activists? Have an idea for an episode you'd like to conduct?

You're invited to be a part of rabble's podcast interview team!

A little bit about us...

rabble presents news for the rest of us. We're dedicated to sharing stories, opinions, and news that mainstream media misses. We share daily news and analysis from grassroots and social activists, seasoned political analysts, Indigenous leaders and environmental defenders. We're sharing the stories that matter to you - free of corporate influence.

rabble.ca is Canada's oldest progressive news site, established in 2001. rabble radio is our weekly podcast, established in 2005. We're currently available on 12 campus and college radio stations across the nation, as well as on Spotify and Apple Podcasts. With all that in mind, we want to thank you for considering to be a part of rabble's volunteer podcast interview team. Our flagship podcast of rabble.ca just wouldn't be possible without the hard work from special people like you.

How do you fit in?

Each week, a volunteer (that's you!) will be in charge of conducting a 25-30 minute interview. From there, our podcast editor will trim that conversation down to a clean 20 minutes to appear on the show.

Sound like something you're interested in?

Please send a formal request and resume (with podcast or radio experience) to breanne@rabble.ca to learn more about this exciting opportunity.
